

FISHING SCHOONER BURNS OFF COAST AFTER EXPLOSION

Sailors, Some of Them Burned,
Row Ashore When Flames
Gain Headway.

After a hard fight with a blaze which finally sent their craft to the bottom and in which several of them were burned, the sailors of the fishing schooner Nelson C. Smith of Atlantic City were resting and nursing their hurts at Keansburg, N. J., to-day. For half an hour they had battled with the flames that shot through their craft when a gasoline tank exploded and the flames spread about the grease smeared hull. Finally when their efforts to save her proved unavailing the captain and his crew of ten men put off in boats and rowed to Keansburg.

For an hour the Nelson C. Smith made a great torch three miles out to sea, and watchers on the coast thought a much larger vessel was on fire. Then the masts fell and soon after all was black again along the sea.

The Smith, of thirty-four tons burden and commanded by Capt. Theodore Ellison of Atlantic City, had been to the New York fish market yesterday and had put down the coast for another fishing trip. Toward evening she came to anchor off Keansburg to wait for bait. It was soon after 7 o'clock that an explosion shook the timbers of the craft and a volume of smoke and fire sprang up from the stern, where the gasoline for the motor was stored. Capt. Ellison threw tarpaulins over the blaze, but it already had gained great headway. The members of the crew formed a bucket brigade and dashed water over the fire. The captain had his hands and arms severely burned and some of the crew were burned slightly.

It was seen that the Smith could not be saved, so the crew threw two of the dories over the side, boarded them and then rowed ashore. There a physician was called, who attended to the captain's injuries. All put up at a shore hotel preparatory to returning to Atlantic City to look for another ship.

Say

There's something that will take away that tired, hot, all-in feeling in just a minute. Something that will make you come out on the street again feeling like a new man. It's fine, sparkling, delicious

HIRES

Yes, right at the nearest soda fountain—for every fountain that is a fountain must have Hires. Taste tickling, isn't it? That's the splendid blending of sassafras, hops, sarsaparilla, wintergreen, birch—the essence of roots and herbs, the sap of forest trees.

Cooling—yes! But it's mighty good for you, too. A natural tonic—but not a trace of drugs. Just helps—never harms.

5c at the fountain—sparkling. No need to say "rootbeer." Just say "Hires." Also at your home, carbonated, in bottles.

CAMMEYER

BASEMENT VALUES ARE ABSOLUTELY HONEST TAKE HEED

MOST Basements are veritable junk shops for every department in the store in which they are situated.

They always have been considered a dumping ground for damaged goods, merchandise that has outlived its usefulness, and all kinds of trash upon which a low price has been put to make up for a total lack of quality.

The Cammeyer moderate priced shoe store in our Basement is run on the same high standard of merchandising as the rest of our business.

We tell you just what a shoe is worth, putting no fictitious value on it. When a shoe is marked down we tell you really what its former price was. In short, you can come into our Basement with a feeling of confidence that your money will purchase more real shoe goodness than anywhere else in New York City.

These are mighty plain facts, but they just about hit the nail on the head.
